Following the success of its first edition, The Rooms Art Fair returns to Mix Brussels for a second edition, reaffirming its a intimate and accessible.

Conceived by Patrick Mestdagh, president of ROCAD (Royal Chamber of Antique Dealers and Art Galleries of Belgium), together with gallerist Sébastien Janssen, The Rooms was created with a shared vision: to establish a fair designed by and for galleries, encouraging direct encounters between dealers, collectors and art lovers, as well as a wider audience curious visitors, newcomers or future collectors eager to discover the world of galleries.

For this new edition, the fair will occupy two wings on the 4th and 5th floors of Mix Brussels, a four-star hotel and club located in the former modernist headquarters of Royale Belge, an iconic 1960s building set in the green surroundings of Watermael-Boitsfort.

For several days, around thirty galleries and art dealers will transform the hotel rooms into exhibition spaces. Remaining true to the fair's open spirit, The Rooms brings together a wide range of specialties: contemporary art, modern art, decorative arts, jewelry, old master works, Haute Époque, non-European art, archaeology, and classical art from Asia, Africa and Oceania.

This unique format with each exhibitor occupying a hotel room and adapting their presentation to the space offers visitors a different discovery experience, encouraging a more direct relationship with the artworks and the dealers presenting them.

Alongside the gallery presentations, the event will also feature several Mood Rooms, conceived as convivial discovery spaces. Visitors will notably find the presence of the barber Bayer & Bayer, as well as Pierre Marcolini, who will be offering ice cream during the event. Additional collaborations and surprises are also expected.

A room will also be imagined by Belgian designer Lionel Jadot, who was responsible for the interior design of Mix Brussels.

To further enrich the program, The Rooms will also host a series of talks organized in partnership with private bank Puilaetco. The topics of these discussions will be announced at a later stage.

Free and open to all from Friday June 5 to Sunday June 7, The Rooms aims to establish itself as a convivial and accessible meeting point in Brussels, encouraging discovery, exchange and encounters between different generations of gallerists, collectors and art enthusiasts.
